

You go to the break room and pour coffee into one of the common-use coffee cups. Above the coffee pot is an inspirational poster. It is a picture of a hang glider with a sunset background. It reads, "Passion: Live daringly, boldly, fearlessly."

You remember a point in your life when you had passion but that's not for you anymore. Dreams and desires are for the naivety of youth. The real world is something else. You've learned to recognize that over the years.